

Education Law

Education law is an area of practice that requires unique expertise. Plunkett Cooney is one of the only firms in Michigan with a team of attorneys dedicated to serving the legal needs of schools, universities and colleges.

The members of Plunkett Cooney's Education Law Practice Group focus their practice in the areas of complex litigation and special matters, including civil rights claims, environmental law, governmental immunity, election law, student discipline and rights, technology law, labor and employment issues, cyber law, construction law, administrative hearings (EEOC, MDCR, etc.), Title VII, Title IX and workers' compensation.

Our attorneys work closely with elected officials, administrators and in-house counsel to solve high-exposure and often sensitive legal matters on behalf of educational institutions. Action plans and budgets are established for each new matter to ensure proper client notification and coordination. And the firm's technology platform promotes teamwork by dramatically improving the ability of our attorneys to coordinate matters in a consistent and cost-effective manner across multiple offices, when necessary.

Our attorneys have considerable experience in the area of education law and are active in the education community. They present seminars and author publications addressing the legal areas of interest to those in the education field.
