A member of the firm's Bloomfield Hills office, Courtney L. Nichols serves as the firm's Special Litigation Department Leader.

Ms. Nichols focuses her litigation practice in the area of employment law, including discrimination, retaliation, and civil rights claims brought under state and federal statutes. She also provides counsel to employers of all sizes regarding complicated employment and labor issues prior to litigation, including compliance with the ADA, FMLA, and FLSA. Ms. Nichols frequently represents clients in drafting and enforcing contractual agreements, including covenants not to compete and severance agreements involving executives.

In addition, Ms. Nichols advises religious institutions on various aspects of employment law, and she works with institutions of higher education to address employment issues and to resolve Title IX claims on campus, which includes training and providing counsel and advice to administrators and staff on investigating and adjudicating such claims.
